Migration under COVID-19: International Student Mobility

Date: 19 October 2020
Time: 12:00-13:00 (CEST)
Format: Zoom Webinar

The Research Group on Migration Law at the Norwegian Centre for Human Rights is organising a webinar series on migration under COVID-19. The first webinar will focus on international student mobility.

2020 has been marked by uncertainty and change. The detrimental effects and implications of the pandemic have been especially noticeable for the more than 15,000 foreign students studying at Norwegian institutions, and the similar number of Norwegian students studying abroad. Despite Norway lifting some of its entry restrictions for students from 1 July, a number of challenges remain for international students seeking to enter the country to study this semester, and for Norwegian students who wish to study abroad.

The first webinar in the series aims to address some of these issues and discuss the substantial impact that the COVID-19 pandemic has had on international student mobility. What were the immediate consequences of the pandemic for international student mobility and how have they evolved throughout the year? What does the pandemic mean for the future of international student mobility and how can students and institutions adapt to these changes?

Panel participants:

- Morgan Alangeh, President of the Association of Norwegian Students Abroad
- Joachim Børlie, International Responsible at the Norwegian Student Organisation
- Hilde Haaland-Kramer, Head of Section for Global Cooperation at the Norwegian Agency for International Cooperation and Quality Enhancement in Higher Education
- Peris Sean Jones, Director of the international Masters programme on the Theory and Practice of Human Rights at the Norwegian Centre for Human Rights

The panel discussion will be held in English and hosted by Eduardo Sánchez Madrigal , research assishttps://www.jus.uio.no/smr/english/people/aca/edum/
