

Responding to Legitimacy Challenges: Opportunities and Choices for the European Court of Human Rights

Researchers Meet the Court

September 21, 2018, Strasbourg

Call for papers – Deadline February 15, 2018

Challenges confront the European Court of Human Rights (ECtHR) and its procedures, policies and judgments. Criticisms concern the Court's backlog, its methods of interpretation, its deference to domestic actors – or its lack thereof. Reactions from states include willful partial compliance with judgments or even principled resistance. These challenges have appeared in many different shapes: not just as criticism from State Parties' governments, but also from domestic courts, academics, civil society organizations and the media.

Against the backdrop of these challenges, we organize a workshop at the European Court of Human Rights to facilitate informal exchanges among academics and members of the Court including the Registry. The aim is to identify and discuss both challenges and possible solutions. The event will address how the ECtHR may respond and does respond by varied means, including:

- criteria for case selection;
- the Court's reasoning;
- pilot judgments;
- dialogues with domestic judiciaries;
- the margin of appreciation doctrine.
